August 11 Showcase – The Harley String Band

By Steve Coffee

Harley String Band is: Three talented singer-songwriters who mine the deep veins of American music to produce the occasional rough diamond. Supporting each other on a wide variety of acoustic instruments, they aspire to breathe new life into traditional musical forms. All three band members have won honors in the prestigious Mid-Atlantic Songwriting Contest.

“HSB” consists of Jim Johnson, Jim Clark, and Steve Coffee. “The Jims” are longtime Folk Club members and have played there often, but the band has never had a showcase. They plan to fill the stage with guitars, banjos, bouzoukis, and mandolins. They promise to leave the accordion at home and not to spend the whole time tuning.

The band has been together for three years and has played many venues around the DC area, including many Songwriters Association of Washington events. High points of their career include a performance at the 2009 Washington Folk Festival and frequent airplay on Mary Cliff’s Traditions program on WAMU.

The band is represented by the mysterious (well, fictitious) “Granny,” a guitar-toting, Harley-riding old lady who refers to the boys as “the boys.” She’s not only the band’s spokesperson, but their mascot and inspiration. “We hope to be able to both play and ride when we’re her age,” said Coffee. “Not that you’d ever catch me on a motorcycle,” he added. Actually, Johnson is the biker of the group.

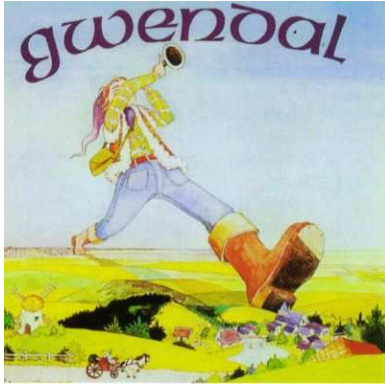

The band has two CDs on the market, one a children’s album and the other a “grownup” album. All the tunes are also available on the major music download sites, “but we’re not sure that most people in our demographic know how to download an MP3 or what to do with it,” allows Johnson.

Early this year the band went “on tour” in Belize and Guatemala. Mostly this means they played at bus stations, town squares, and ferry stops, but they also got invited to house parties and one club gig. “Traveling with a guitar on your back is a very different experience,” says Clark. “Opportunities for interaction with the locals open up that you would never normally have.” They came back with a really nice travelogue video and a cool new prog-folk song about Maximón, the Mayan outlaw deity. (Look it up!)

French Folksmen – Gwendal

In 1972, French guitarist Jean-Marie Renard gathered five friends of different musical cultures (traditional, jazz, folk, rock'n'roll) around a common passion for Celtic music to form a new group, Gwendal. During that time France saw a number of new groups forming, inspired by the Breton and Irish traditional music. Much of this new popularity was created in the wake of the success of French Celtic harpist Alan Stivell, whose signing with the Philips recording company in 1966 heralded the birth of the New Breton and Celtic music movement.

In 1974 they released their first album, Irish Jig, which featured cover art of a giant marching across a field playing a bombarde* (the band's emblem to this day). What set Gwendal apart during this period was their early adoption of modern rhythmic influences from jazz and rock'n'roll into some of their Celtic tunes. This was enhanced further with the introduction of electric instruments in 1977 on their third album, Rainy Day.

The evolution of the band continued in the 80's, with the addition of a synthesizer, and an increasing number of personal compositions included on the recordings. Over more than three decades, the band has continued to morph itself, as musician changes occurred several times. Throughout these changes, the following instrumentation has been the core of the group's sound: metal flute and violin for the melodies, acoustic guitar, mandolin and bass for the rhythm. This sound is anchored by the one remaining musician from the original lineup, Youenn Le Berre (flute, bagpipes, saxophone, bombarde), who is the current leader of the group (founder Jean-Marie Renard is the manager).
