August 13 Showcase – Frazier

By Frazier with Dan Grove

Frazier has been singing and playing music since childhood. From the "Minisingers" in Washington state - Tumbling Tumbleweeds, to church choirs, to the Navy's choir. He sang tenor, if you can believe it, he says in his now baritone announcer's voice. From voice-overs to folk music to heavy rock and roll, he's done it all. Well, not all - no rap, hip hop, or heavy country/bluegrass.

For the past 30+ years he sang and played in a trio and a duo, which both fizzled out due to family and distance issues. So for the first time in... well, too many years to elaborate on, he's doing the solo thing. It's the first time he's choosing songs based on his voice, and not the harmony potential. He's missing the harmony, but enjoying the attention. His musical influences are the Beatles, Beach Boys, Everly Brothers, Simon & "Funkle," and Alice in Chains - basically musicians and groups with a great harmony component, reflecting his earlier collaborative performing. He has several originals, and says he's "deciding how many to make you suffer through."

Frazier has lived in the DC metro area for about 50 years (he went to Richard Montgomery High School in Rockville). He mostly accompanies himself on guitar, but has a couple of songs on the keyboard. He plays at open mics up to four times a week now, all over the DC metro region, and loves the Folk Club nights most of all. The stated rule: "Shut the hell up, somebody's playing," makes it a joy to perform here. He's looking forward to seeing how many songs he can cram into his allotted two set time slot!

“Spider” John Koerner – Authentic Folk Legend

As Bob Dylan wrote in his book Chronicles: about meeting contemporary John Koerner in the late 1950s, “He was tall and thin with a look of perpetual amusement on his face... When he spoke he was soft spoken, but when he sang he became a field holler shouter.” Though Koerner and Dylan teamed up briefly as a duo in 1960, it was with Dave Ray and Tony Glover that he first achieved real stature among the ranks of the folk/blues revivalists of the early ‘60s. What set Koerner, Ray, and Glover apart from many of their contemporaries was that rather than merely imitating the Southern bluesmen of yore, they were determined to fully inhabit their songs. As one writer put it, “Imagine the Kingston Trio after a stint with the Hell’s Angels.”

John Koerner was born in 1938 in Rochester, NY. In the ‘50s, while enrolled at the University of Minnesota, he became involved with the local burgeoning folk scene, and with a borrowed guitar and a Burl Ives songbook threw himself headlong into a more than 50-year experience of discovering, plumbing, and sharing a wealth of American music, both traditional and original, to audiences captivated by the energy with which he delivers his performances. As John says about the music he plays, “...it's not for just sitting around quietly, listening. I learn most of my stuff in the bars, and you've got to punch it out in the bars, and that picks people up and livens them up. I'm trying to not put them to sleep; I'm trying to have them feel the power of these songs.”

Along with Ray and Glover, the trio released their first album, Blues, Rags and Hollers in 1963. In keeping with the nature of the earlier blues artists who inspired them, the members took on nicknames. Dave Ray became “Snaker”, Tony Glover became “Little Sun”, and John became “Spider” John, by nature of his long, slender arms and legs. After recording their third and final album together in 1965 (until 1996’s reunion session, One Foot in the Groove) John felt the time was right to move on to a new stage in his life (and accompanying musical direction). He experimented with electric instruments and a more raucous style on 1969’s Running, Jumping, Standing Still, but returned to a more traditional style with 1974’s Some American Folk Songs Like They Used To (with guest appearances by Ray and Glover).

Soon other interests took hold of John’s life, including filmmaking, astronomy, and vintage shipbuilding. Occasionally he heads back into the studio and cuts an album - to Koerner it's all interconnected (In 1992 he joined Ramblin’ Jack Elliot and Utah Phillips on the CD Legends of Folk). “I have been a folk musician, I have been a folk astronomer, I have been a folk boatbuilder. I hope to be folk-other things,” he says. “The idea is that you take yourself as a person of modest talents, you become interested in something, and you throw yourself into it because it intrigues the st out of you. Anybody could do what I did. You just have to treat it with a bit of abandon and not worry about what other people think.”

Throughout his musical career, John has inspired other musicians, including Bob Dylan, Bonnie Raitt, John Lennon (Spider was also a Beatles fan), and Beck. He has appeared occasionally on that radio show hosted by another old Minnesotan, A Prairie Home Companion. This year he released his latest CD, What’s Left of Spider John, a collection of traditional and original tunes with minimal accompaniment, recorded in mono direct to tape through 1950’s tube microphones. It seems a fittingly authentic way to capture the spirit of one of our most authentic folk legends.
