January 8 Showcase – Kathleen Huber

by Kathleen

The library in my hometown opened in 1919. It's always been a favorite place of mine. Architectural details richly grace the interior and natural light, particularly in the afternoon, creates a magical space. Important things happen in spaces like that—like questioning social norms and contemplation of possibilities. So when I was telling a friend about my hometown library it surprised me that I knew very little about its benefactor, A. Barton Hepburn, whose gift made such a difference to me.

This ignorance of mine could not stand. I learned about A. Barton Hepburn, his early success in the timber business in a nearby town, his career as a highly respected financial man, his interest in currencies, his presidential appointment, and his time at the helm of Chase Bank. All those successes (and many more) allowed the gift that impacted me—greatly—and countless others. My response: Awesome! Good job! Thanks for sharing, Mr. Hepburn!

Then, this summer, I made a pilgrimage to the six libraries and one hospital that were gifted to small towns in my county by Mr. Hepburn. In one long day I traveled to each of the buildings and, on the front steps, played and sang “Ring Them Bells” by Bob Dylan. I took photos inside and out. It was an interesting day. I have quite a bit to say about this pilgrimage of mine but the main thing is that even our greatest hopes and best endeavors are like throwing seeds into the wind. Sometimes they take and sometimes they don't.

It seems my current songwriting is informed by the late 1800s/early 1900s and I'll be sharing a few new compositions to prove it. There's a song about fields of poppies that bloomed on the battle fields across Europe after the end of World War I. There's another that's inspired, in part, by a classic piece of fiction published in 1899. There are a few others in the works that aren't quite ready for sharing but my summer pilgrimage put me in the mindset of ‘where you come from’ and how that informs a life. Now my songs are flavored with the same. I welcome this current phase of writing and contemplation. We may never fully know what seeds we've ‘thrown’ or if they will endure, thrive, and then grow to full blossom. But, it seems to me, we must continue to cast them into the wind. Joyfully. Purposefully. Freely.

Valeria and Sherry Stewart and Niels Jonker will be joining me. What a great way to start a year...just as I did exactly five years ago with my first Folk Club showcase (January 2014). Time flies.

“upbeat songs of love, life, and liberation, delivered with deft guitar work and a clear ringing voice.” B Junker-SongSpace

The Folk Club of Reston-Herndon is a non-profit organization

Shawna Caspi performs solo, but there's a whole band under her fingertips. A mighty singer, a story sculptor, and a truth teller, she tours across Canada and the US. She believes in poetry and the power of one person and one instrument, accompanying herself with a remarkable lyrical fingerpicking guitar style.

Her performances are an enchanting display of her multiple gifts for writing songs you want to hear again. Her remarkable voice is one of the best, like a magnet to the ears. Her guitar skills are dazzling, enhancing each song, but not for the sake of showing off her instrumental prowess.

Shawna loves the landscapes of her travels and while weaving them into her songs, she has also been portraying them on canvases, painting one-of-a-kind works of art inspired by the rich scenery she sees on tour. To complete the package, she creates her own album cover artwork.

For the past few years, she has been attracting DC-area fans on both sides of the river, including Focus Music, SAW, Mary "Traditions" Cliff, FSGW (The Folklore Society of Greater Washington), and other nonprofit music organizations and house concert hosts.

This will be Shawna's first appearance at the Folk Club.
